WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- A couple more pacific waves of inclement weather will impact interior Northern California Tuesday through Thursday with potentially heavy precipitation. Snow levels will begin over mid-slopes of the Sierra Nevada Tuesday before increasing to near pass levels on Wednesday. As snow levels climb, some snow melt is quite possible due to rainfall and warmer temperatures. The abundant rainfall expected Tuesday through Thursday combined with the sufficiently wet ground from the most recent storms, rainfall amounts could be enough to cause smaller stream/river and street flooding.
- An Areal Flood Watch has been issued from late Monday night through Thursday night for the mountains, foothills, and northern to eastern Central Valley.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

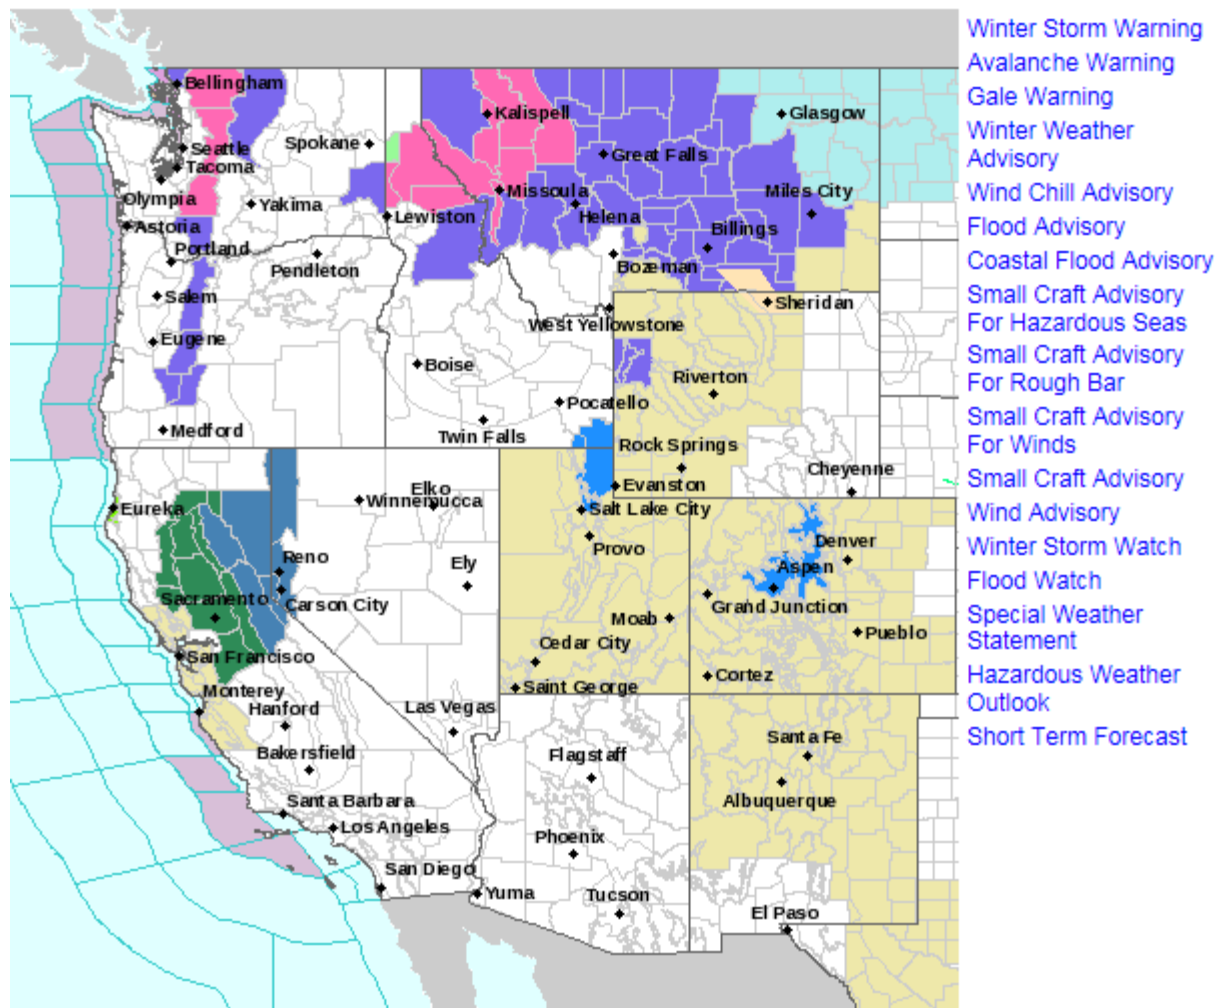

The next storm system begins to spread in late Monday night into early Tuesday. This system will have a very wet plume of moisture, similar to the one which brought heavy precipitation today. While the exact timing and location have varied, confidence is improving in the potential for another wet event. The difference with this and the last system is there will be some cooler air ahead of this system which will allow somewhat lower snow levels, bringing the potential for significant snow impacts for mountain travel Tuesday into Wednesday. Snow levels are expected to rise to around pass levels late Tuesday night into Wednesday as warmer air advects in. Up to 1 to 2 feet of wet snow are possible at pass levels by Wednesday afternoon. Several inches of snow are possible down to around 5000 feet over the Northern Sierra, and down to 4000 feet over the mountains of western Plumas County and Lassen Park. A Winter Storm Watch is in effect from early Tuesday through Wednesday afternoon. Additional snow is also possible with another system on Thursday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Seasonal conditions will prevail west of the mountains early this week, with the marine layer and onshore flow, while the mountains and deserts remain dry and seasonally warm. The mild conditions will peak on Wednesday. Then, a storm system from the north will bring stronger onshore flow, cooling, and a shot at some significant rainfall across the region Thursday night into Friday morning. Dry with possible gusty offshore winds are expected early next week.

CAL OES LAW ENFORCEMENT MISSIONS

New Cal OES Law Missions

- 2016-LAW-28823, 12/10/16, 1200 hours: Washoe County Sheriff's Department (WCSD) requested resources via Placer County Sheriff's Department (PCSD) to locate a missing skier that was swept away by an avalanche. The original reports stated that possibly up to four skiers were swept away by the avalanche. It was later determined that only one skier was missing. The area of the search is the Mount Rose Ski resort specifically and area that was closed to the avalanche danger called Jackpot Chute. WCSD is requested five avalanche trained search dog teams. Placer County is responded with the five search dog teams. Placer County and Washoe County have a MOU in place to assist each other. Update: 12/11/16, 0800 hours, PCSD advised that the search was suspended overnight due to safety concerns. This search continued at 0900 hours on 12/11/16. Mission Ongoing.
